

Review

Melanie Martinez is back with her new music film "K-12" directed and written by herself. Premiere of the film was on September 6 for one night only in some cinemas. It was also released on Youtube for free. The soundtrack of the film was from Melanie's newest album with the same title, which is the mix of soulful pop and low-key hip-hop.

The story is about a brave-hearted girl called "Crybaby" and her best friend Angelita. They embark on a mission to get down the oppressive schooling system of K-12. On their way they meet more and more friends. Music in the film also tells a story, we have to listen carefully to understand it. The soundtrack and a plot includes relatable problems of today's teens, such as: different types of sexism, eating disorder, body related problems and bullying.

Personally, I was rowed by the outstanding performance of the cast and Melanie herself. They showed the meaning so well, some scenes made my cry. The music was emotional too. Everything just in Melanie's style.

After all, I think this film is a thing everybody should see. It has great meaning, plot, music and the cast made a convincing performance.
